

US Presidential Elections - Who won the Blue Collar Vote?

Panel discussion

One of the decisive questions in the 2020 election will be how the blue collar vote will be cast. In 2016, a significant portion of the white working class - disaffected by being left behind by post-industrial, neoliberal politics of the political elite in DC - was led to believe in the rhetorical antics of the disruptive force of Donald Trump. At the same time, Hillary Clinton was not nearly as successful in mobilizing the black blue collar vote as was Obama before.

In this panel discussion, we will look into the diverse factors that have defined the blue collar vote - in particular along the line of race and other demographic factors. Our experts will also speculate on why certain platform issues of either party did or did not speak to this particular section of the electorate.
